Re: Your August 30 Emails to Apple

Dear Mr. Southern:

Your August 30 emails to Apple have been directed to my attention. I am an attorney on the IP Transactions team at Apple, and am handling this matter. Please send any additional correspondence regarding this matter to me.

Apple respects the valid intellectual property rights of others and takes seriously allegations of infringement. Your email asserts that "Apple Inc. is on formal notice regarding systemic infringement and licensing obligations for the Southern Star Pro. Studios™ IP Stack, including but not limited to Mint-to Logic™, Shepherd's Method™, Phronesis Cyber Physics™, Reflexive Governance Engines™, Chrono-Synaptic Memory Ledger™, ValiPass™, Shepherd Coin™, Quantum and Post-Quantum systems, and all related works." If you contend that Apple or any Apple product or service practices any patent claim or other intellectual property rights that you claim to own, please identify the specific patents or intellectual property rights that you contend are infringed or require a license and provide support for that contention, including claim charts explaining why you believe Apple practices any patents. We will also consider any other information you think will be helpful for our assessment of your assertion.

To the extent your correspondence attempts to offer product, service, or business ideas or suggestions, we refer you to Apple's unsolicited idea submission policy, which is available online at: <http://www.apple.com/legal/policies/ideas.html>. As the policy indicates, Apple does not consider unsolicited ideas. This is due in part because of the large volume of correspondence received, but also to avoid potential misunderstandings or disputes if Apple's products, services, or marketing strategies seem similar to ideas submitted to Apple.

Sincerely,

Jacob Anderson
